

As the grandson of former MLA Hans Broten, who served with Tommy Douglas and Woodrow Lloyd, Cam grew up knowing the value of political involvement and the importance of building a better Saskatchewan for everyone.

Since his mother is a teacher and his father a social worker, Cam has lived in several communities throughout Saskatchewan. He was born in Regina and spent his early years growing up in La Loche, Green Lake, Meadow Lake, and La Ronge, before his family settled in Saskatoon.

Cam earned an International Studies degree at the University of Saskatchewan and a Master's degree in Political Science at Simon Fraser University. During his undergraduate degree, Cam spent four months studying in Guatemala and living with a local family. While in graduate school, he worked as a teaching assistant in the Political Science department and as a facilitator with the BC Citizens' Assembly on Electoral Reform. Cam also worked as a tree planter during the summers throughout his university years.

Before he was elected as an MLA, Cam worked as a policy analyst with the provincial government and a health policy manager with the Saskatchewan Medical Association. He also served as an elected board member with the Saskatoon Co-op.

Cam was first elected as an MLA in 2007 and re-elected in 2011. He serves as the critic for Health, Seniors, Advanced Education, Employment and Immigration.

Cam is married to Ruth, a music therapist. They have two daughters, Ingrid and Clara.

Cam has great political skills, he values teamwork, and he demonstrates thoughtful leadership around the caucus. I know he's ready to lead and I'm pleased that he shares my vision of electing a more representative legislature, including more women."

"Cam is very astute, has great judgment, and demonstrates a lot of substance. He listens closely, communicates well, and has a solid backbone. Those are critical attributes for effective leadership. That's why I have no doubt that Cam is ready to provide the leadership we need."

"For me leadership comes down to three qualities: character, ability and judgment. Cam has proven he has all three. He acts from principle and perseveres when the going gets rough. He combines energy with experience and no one is more ready to lead our party and our province."
